The UK has committed the nation to removing all fossil-based carbon by 2050 as part of its commitment to the Glasgow Climate Pact. Part of that process will involve the creation of lots of natural living matter in plants and soils and waterways. Doing this has many advantages for health and wellbeing, for putting new nature into our lives, for reducing flash flooding, and for safeguarding the future of our children.

Tim O’Riordan will look at the scope for all Parishes and Town Councils to play their part in this exciting enterprise over the decades to come.

Norfolk ALC are doing their bit by only offering vegetarian food, working with UEA to offset the carbon footprint of the conference, working with Cloudy IT to offer a virtual conference and making it paper free.
